The Old Settlers

Lovina's [Andrews] lover died just before they were to be married. She devoted her life to caring for sick mothers and new born babies. She used to sit and tell of the Indians coming by the cabin, their weaving cloth and making clothes, the making of shoes out of deer skin; hunting the cattle in the woods as they all ran wild as there were no fences yet, so they could get milk. All these Andrews had only one dug well so all came for water, the picking of berries in the woods and the clearing of the land, when they first came to Adams county.
