

Decatur Daily Democrat, Adams Co, IN; Saturday, 3 August 1907

ASHLEY MANN OF THIS CITY IS DEAD

Been Ill Several Years

The Funeral Will Occur Sunday Afternoon From the Evangelical Church

Ashley Mann, one of the oldest and most respected citizens of this city, died last evening at his home in the north part of the city after an illness dating back several years, death resulting from a complication of diseases. Mr. Mann was seventy-eight years of age and during the most of that time he spent in Decatur where he followed the trade of plasterer. However, several years ago he was stricken with a complication of diseases that seemed to baffle his physicians and it was then that he came near dying as all hope for his recovery had been given up. He rallied and after being bedfast for several months, was again able to get up and around, but practically since that time he had been unable to do any work. He was a member of the Evangelical church, and was one of the leading workers in its behalf, and when able, was always in attendance at the services, and his many little deeds in its interest will be sadly missed by those who came in touch with him. The funeral services will be held Sunday afternoon leaving the house at two-thirty o'clock. Services at the Evangelical church at three, Rev. A. B. Haist officiating, and interment will be made in the Decatur cemetery.