JAMES HENDRICKS

James A. (Jim) Hendricks, one of the oldest residents of Adams County and of the town of Monroe, was unexpectedly taken by death on July 15. A very familiar sight in late years was to see him walking briskly each day to get the mail at the Post Office and stopping for short chats with friends, as well as out to see daily progress on the new Adams Central School building which is under construction on ground that was part of the Hendricks farm.

He held several county offices, was the first county road superintendent, also was a County Commissioner, and was employed in the railroad office in Monroe for 23 years.

Mr. Hendricks would have been 90 years old had he lived till Dec. 11, 1953, something he looked forward to. He was a Farm Bureau member in Washington Township for many years. He always enjoyed the meetings and visiting with his friends and neighbors.

He was married to Elizabeth Thompson on February 23, 1885 [sic], and they celebrated 68 years together. He is survived by Mrs. Hendricks and two sons, Clyde of Plumtree and Howard of Monroe, and four grandchildren.

FORMER BERNE MAN DIES FROM CAR FUMES

Word was received here recently of the death of John Norton of Lansing, Michigan. It is understood that Norton, who was in his 40's, committed suicide by inhaling fumes from his son's automobile. His act is blamed on domestic trouble. Norton was employed at the Sinclair Service Station while in Berne and he and his family resided on West Main street, in the house where Mr. and Mrs. Orval Habegger and family now live.
