

Source: Crawfordsville Weekly Journal, 27 January 1899

The Greenlee boy, who has given the police and truant officer so much trouble has been taken to the poor farm where he is to remain confined until he is old enough to send to the penitentiary, in case he should hereafter break the law. He does not seem to have any degree of knowledge that he has done anything wrong when he takes horses, whips, caps, etc., and while he does not deny doing the acts, it seems as though he has no remorse at all for his deeds. The boy is to be pittied for his seeming utter lack of being able to determine right from wrong. - transcribed by Kim H.