When Andy Carnegie passes around his next allotment of hero medals, Oscar Roberts and Fred Chrstan of The Review will each be entitled to one about the size of a dinner plate. At noon they discovered a fire in the S.G. Paris home across the street from the Review office and by prompt action prevent a disastrous blaze. Mrs. Paris had left home for a short time and her little daughter Nannie had lighted a match to look in a closet for her coat. The ferments in the closet caught fire and the child was standing near crying while the fire spread. Before the department arrived the fire had been extinguished with water found in a dish pan and a wash pan, a frantic search for a hydrant resulting in the amateur department failing to find the hydrant in the kitchen.
