

HARRY WILLIAMS - little boy wants chew from Albright

Source: Crawfordsville Daily Journal 20 July 1892 p3

A great trial is in progress in Overton's court this afternoon in which Tilman Albright figures as defendant. Tin. complaint is for presenting Harry Williams, the promising son of James Williams, with a chew of tobacco. It is claimed that one tine day last week that little Harry walked up to the establishment of Mr. Albright and lifting his tender blue eyes confidingly asked for "a chew of tobaccy." It is further asserted that Mr. Albright accomdated the young gentleman. A day or so after, however, he had occassion to give little Harry tho razoo from tho store where he was loafing. Little Harry went home chewing the rag enthusiastically. In less than an hour, however, he reappeared and after executing some fancy capers in front of tho store began to march about in a circle calling out: "You don't know what my pa's going to do! You don't know what my pa's going to do!" Mr. Albright who was standing in the door remarked that he not only didn't but further volunteered the information that he didn't give a continental. He found out later when he was summoned to appear before 'Squire Overton on a charge of giving little Harry a chew. - kbz