Heloise Tague lost

Joseph Tague left his 3-year-old daughter, Heloise, at the home of his father, Caswell Tague, while absent a few hours, Sun. There were other children with whom she was playing but in some manner she strayed away and when her father returned she was not there. A search was at once started. In the meantime, Bud Kidwell found a little girl playing in the creek under the bridge near Walter Grimes' place. She had torn her dress in some way and had taken it off and was carrying it under her arm. She was taken to Tude Hamilton's home where she was cleaned up and fed, but could not tell where she belonged. The find was reported to Marshall McCall who began to call up the country south and in doing so crossed up with Mr. Tagues' inquiries, and the little girl was soon restored to her parents. It is over a mi. in a straight line from her grandfather's home on Will Milligan's place to where she was found. She didn't seem to be a bit worried.
