

Waveland Collegiate School

Source: Crawfordsville Weekly Journal Crawfordsville, Montgomery County, Indiana 27 February 1873 p 2

“Waveland news items – The trustees of the Waveland Collegiate Institute recently held a meeting at which they decided to go forward at once and build a new house. The old building has become entirely too small, so much so that part of the time two teachers have to occupy one room at the same time. They still lack some money, but believe they will be able to raise the amount by the time it will be needed. In the meantime the Trustees would be pleased to have all the friends of the school come forward and assist in the noble work. Mr. John Milligan is the authorized agent to receive such subscriptions. The site for the new building has not been definitely fixed, but the probabilities are that it will be built on the present site, as that seems to be more central and will accommodate more people than any other place they can get, without going out of town.